This Bachelor's programme covers the diversity of styles of literature from Latin America (and America) and the Iberian Peninsula, not only in terms of their own evolution but also in terms of their mutual relationships. At the University of Fribourg, particular attention is granted to the relationship between literature and human sciences, and to the contribution of interdisciplinary studies. This methodology places emphasis on teaching codicological description and textual history, with Fribourg being the only university in the BENEFRI network to offer this speciality. Subjects cover the study of the language, literature and culture of medieval Spain, on the one hand, and the study of the manuscript tradition of works and their position in the history of the language on the other.

Profile of the study programme

The Bachelor's study programme covers the diversity of styles of literature from Latin America (and America) and the Iberian Peninsula, not only in terms of their own evolution but also in terms of their relationships with one another. In terms of methodology, we grant particular attention to the relationship between literature and human sciences, and to the contribution of interdisciplinary studies. Our field of studies and methodological approach show the specificity of the programme, which is supported by lectures, seminars, colloquia and conferences to develop our research in this field.

Our study programmes are general and progressive; there is a great deal of flexibility in terms of content and the order of courses: students' autonomy is not only respected, it is encouraged as part of their education. However, an adviser is at students' disposition to guide them in their choices.

The two basic modules (M1 and M2) are preferably undertaken in the first year of study, as they allow students to acquire the methodological and scientific groundings for their future studies. As for the rest of the modules, it is recommended to take them in the order indicated. However, it is possible to change this order depending on students' possibilities and on courses offered each academic year.

If the subject is chosen as a programme with 120 ECTS credits, students can gain credits in one or several subject areas in the Language and Literature Department or in a subject in another department, if the subject is related to our field of study. To pass a seminar, students must actively take part in work sessions, make an oral presentation during the semester and write a report in Spanish (subject to courses offered in other languages in our field).

A comprehensive course combining the Bachelor and Master levels opens up a wide variety of career opportunities, such as:

- Education: university teaching and research; teaching at secondary and higher secondary level or in private schools and companies;
- Writing professions: journalism, advertising, libraries, archives, literary and technical translation, book industry (publishing, management and retail);
- Other: diplomacy, banking sector, tourism, hotel industry, public relations, new technologies, interpreting, commercial and cultural management, international organisations (Red Cross and others), public and private administration, etc.
