Theoretical perspectives aim to approach the different literary genres, both in poetry and prose. Rigorous learning of metrics, rhetoric, stylistics, narratology and history of language make up the bases for all literary approaches and research. In both teaching and research, members of staff are attentive to the constitutive role that the Italian language and culture play in Switzerland and to the literary and intellectual heritage they possess.

Fribourg profile
The Bachelor's study programme offers teaching in literature and philology characterised by its attention to the specific methods of analysing poetry and prose. An introduction to Italian philology and to the history of the language provides the necessary knowledge with which to handle all literary texts. Lectures on the history of literature provide the essential references to Italian tradition; in addition, specific lessons offer an approach to all of the key moments in this history, involving a critical comparison of the masterpieces in Italian, from Dante and Petrarca, to Leopardi and Montale. Several lectures and seminars also provide the opportunity to explore the multiple facets of the contemporary language and literature.

From the first semester, teaching is mainly in the form of seminars, which encourages active participation and learning. All lectures, seminars, exercises and exams are delivered in Italian. This course mainly features seminars, which encourage active participation and learning. All lectures, seminars, exercises and exams are delivered in Italian. Profile of the study programme
Italian literary and philological studies at the University of Fribourg have a long tradition, marked notably by the work of eminent scholars, such as Gianfranco Contini, Giuseppe Billanovich and Giovanni Pozzi. In Fribourg, they founded an authoritative school of analysis of literary texts which, using methods of philological research and formalist criticism, has achieved and continues to achieve extremely original results. Within the language and literature department, the Italian subject area follows the principles of this school, characterised by attention to ties between the theoretical and historical aspects of literary experience. The historical dimension, which concerns the eight centuries of Italian literary production, is managed by two professors who, based on rigorous research and taking into account the most recent orientations of criticism, offer courses about the period from the Middle Ages through to the Renaissance and about the modern and contemporary period, from the 16th to 20th centuries. A third professor focuses on philology of literary texts and on the history of the language.

If you are interested in the Italian language and literature, the acquisition of methods and competences to analyse poetry and prose will help you to appreciate literary masterpieces of Italian tradition, from Dante and Petrarca, to Leopardi and Montale, right through to contemporary literature. This Bachelor's programme provides also an introduction to Italian philology and to the history of the Italian language, while specific lectures on literary history focus on the key moments of the all tradition, from Middle Ages to 20th century. Armed with this knowledge, you will be able to critically analyse all Italian literary texts.
