Access to further studies
This Bachelor programme qualifies students for the Master programme Culture, Politics and Religion in Pluralist Societies.

Profile of the study programme
Sociological studies train for the scientific analysis of social, economical and political processes taking place within contemporary societies. They thus allow to scientifically approach topical subjects by transmitting knowledge on general and specialised fields of the discipline as well as methodological skills in data collection and analysis.

Fribourg profile
The Bachelor study programme in sociology is a curriculum aiming to the scientific analysis of topical subjects. The students will develop a comprehensive understanding of the links between global structural trends on the one side and their impacts on the everyday life of individuals on the other side. In addition to knowledge on the main traditional and contemporary sociological theories and schools of thought, it allows to deepen the study in the following fields: social change; functioning of institutions; lifestyle of populations (migrants; youth; occupational groups; women); social interactions; otherness and intercultural relations; communication and medias. Furthermore, it offers an opening on other disciplines, especially anthropology and religious studies.

Learning outcomes and career openings
Skills
The Bachelor programme in sociology is based on three traditional pillars:

1. General sociology through the study of traditional and contemporary authors as well as the analysis of the main contemporary changes (globalisation, inter-ethnic relations, institutional change);
2. The acquisition of methodological skills: qualitative (interviews, observation, video) and quantitative (survey, basic knowledge in statistical analysis) methods;
3. The acquisition of practical skills related to project management, scientific and communication activities.

Career openings
At the end of the three years of training, the Bachelor programme in sociology offers two types of orientations:
– It aims to train future professionals capable of analysing and synthesising the contemporary issues and challenges related to the current social changes (globalisation, intercultural relations). It endows students with skills in data collection and analysis that are useful for this purpose. It therefore meets the needs of communities and public, associative and private organisations;
– It gives access to Master programmes in which students deepen and further supplement their knowledge in the specialised fields of sociology or of other social sciences. They will therefore be able to design action programmes and research projects or to accompany change in different types of institutions.
