Fribourg profile
The History Domain offers a General History doctoral programme in French and German.

General History concerns the exploration and analysis of the perception and construction of past realities. As part of a doctorate, the candidates demonstrate their ability to:

– Develop new sources and use them for the advancement of research;
– Formulate guiding questions, demonstrate their relevance and provide responses to them;
– Consider, discuss and assess existing research and demonstrate its shortcomings;
– Present research findings in an appropriate manner.

Doctoral students will be assisted through regular research colloquia and personal tutorship.

The Fribourg doctoral programme contains specific focuses in the following fields in particular:

- Research into federalism and nationalism
- Migration studies
- Studies in bilingualism
- Research into extremism
- The history of international relations
- Urban history
- The history of knowledge
