This Bachelor’s programme covers both the ancient Greek and Roman world. Its main focus is the acquisition and consolidation of Greek and Latin language skills, as well as the interpretation of literary documents in the broader context of Greek and Roman culture.

At the University of Fribourg, we place special emphasis on the reception of Greek classical antiquity during the imperial period, and the culture and literature of Late Antiquity, the Latin Middle Ages and the Byzantine Renaissance. In partnership with the Institute of General and Comparative Literature, students also study the influence of literary forms and classical mythology on modern literature. In line with the University of Fribourg’s language policy, Classics students have the possibility of taking their courses in two languages (French and German).

Learning outcomes and career openings
On completing their course, students will have acquired a command of Greek and Latin and in-depth knowledge of Graeco-Roman literature and culture. They will be capable of translating a Greek or Latin text, analysing it grammatically and stylistically, placing it in its literary, historical and cultural context and establishing links with modern literature. For a given problem, they will have the requisite methodological skills to draw up a pertinent bibliography, search for sources, analyse them critically and in detail, present a summary of the issue and provide an oral or written presentation of the results of their research.

The principal career openings for Classics students are:
- Teaching Latin and Greek at secondary school level I;
- An academic career in classical studies;
- Public administration and cultural policy;
- Administrative posts in scientific bodies;
- Private sector (human resources).
