the ancient world, Middle Ages, modern times through to today, grips with the different eras and finding links between them. From unforeseen events. In short, studying history constitutes coming to developments, causes and consequences, but also chaotic and fine art and engagement in political organisations. History pinpoints relations, family, visions of religion, ideologies, knowledge cultures, human activities and thought: work, exchange of goods, social connections and to evaluate and categorise them critically. Their competence and knowledge are valued in all fields of employment which involve communication methods which have been shaped by history and culture. Qualified history teachers play a vital role in transferring historical knowledge to future generations; Historical Studies and the additional teaching and education course form the basis for such a career. The study of history also provides career opportunities in public relations, journalism, national and international organisations and in institutions which serve to store, process and present knowledge of the past, i.e. in archives, libraries and museums. Careers in higher education and research require a doctorate, which can be obtained through the broad spectrum of research projects offered by the University of Fribourg. History graduates are not limited to any single career option; they are highly sought after in fields involving teaching, transferring information to the media.
and safeguarding knowledge about the past.
