Access to further studies
This Bachelor programme qualifies students for the Master programmes: Art History, Archaeology (with the Archaeology option).

The Bachelor’s programme in Art History offers students the opportunity of learning about Art History over a broad time span, ranging from Art History and Classical Archaeology to History of Contemporary Art. Students can explore the periods which interest them most in greater depth.

This study programme is taught partly in French and partly in German. Students must take modules in both languages, which will vary from course to course, but they can prepare their presentation, coursework and exams in the language of their choice (in either French or German).

The programme is composed of core modules and more specialised modules. The core modules, compulsory for all students, provide basic knowledge on all periods of Art History. The more specific modules enable students to broaden their education in three of the four periods of Art History and they can choose an «Archaeology» option with a specific set of classes and internships, which gives them the opportunity of later pursuing a Master’s in Archaeology.

Compulsory modules
The compulsory modules consist of four courses. Each of these introductory modules corresponds to one of the four periods of Art History. Students thus obtain basic knowledge to help them understand and interpret works of art in relation to materiality, historical context and function. The aim of the course is to broaden the students' knowledge of the great stylistic traditions and the classification of works of art from antiquity to today. The methods of formal analysis and content, as well as the scientific approach to art, are one of the major pillars of the programme.

Specialisation in Art History
Students can choose three of the four modules offered. Each module deepens their knowledge and methods of analysis by exploring themes that are specific to the respective periods. Different methodologies and processes of interpretation are examined. Case studies are used to encourage a scientific approach to description, analysis and interpretation.

Archaeology option
The Archaeology option is based on modules three and four of the compulsory courses, and is consolidated through three optional modules. It first focuses on archaeological techniques and methods, including an introduction to archaeometry, and secondly teaches students about monuments, objects and the material and artistic culture of classical antiquity (Greek and Roman) while developing an anthropological approach. Most lectures are held in French, though some may be held in German.

Learning outcomes and career openings
This course aims to convey basic knowledge on all periods of Art History and to teach students about the critical use of diverse sources, interpretations, methods and theories. This knowledge prepares students for the professional world (in the domains of museums, the art market, culture and publishing, conservation of historical monuments, etc.) or for further research in a Master’s course.
