The University of Fribourg is one of the only universities in Switzerland to offer a Master's programme in Contemporary History. You will study the political, social and cultural history of the 19th and 20th centuries with a focus on post-1945. Geographically, the programme is centered around Swiss and European contemporary history. The Fribourg Master in Contemporary History is research based. The Master brings multi-disciplinarity together with bilingualism and includes approaches of neighbouring social and cultural disciplines, such as European Studies, Social Anthropology and Science of Religions. A large number of teaching staff and researchers cover a broad variety of topics. You can take the Master in German, French and bilingually in German and French with a «mention bilingue» in the diploma.

Profile of the study programme
The Master in Contemporary History deepens your knowledge in Swiss and European Contemporary History, which are the objects of specific modules. Center stage are topics from the political, social and cultural history, analyzed from national and transnational perspectives. Your Master skills then allow you to conceptualize and write your Master's thesis, a process that is closely monitored and structured. Various ERASMUS contracts with foreign European universities allow you to integrate your courses abroad into the Fribourg Master programme.

Fribourg profile
Characteristic for the Fribourg Master is its bilingualism. You can take the Master in German, French or bilingually in both languages, thereby earning a «mention bilingue» in your Master diploma. We offer bilingual seminars taught in both languages with each participant speaking in his language. Not only do you improve your language skills. You also get first hand experience of different academic cultures. The BENEFRI network allows you to take courses in Bern and Neuchâtel and include them into your Fribourg Master. You also benefit from the activities and seminars of the Fribourg Institute for Contemporary Swiss History. A high number of teaching staff monitors your Master and thereby facilitates the compatibility of class room and work place.

Learning outcomes and career openings
The Fribourg Master in Contemporary History adds a historical dimension to your understanding of the present. The Master offers skills on various levels: you learn to adequately analyze complex historical matters, to present them properly, to investigate autonomously and reproducibly historical matters, to find the proper methods for investigation and to develop a critical relationship to your own work. The goal of this Master's programme is the development of independent research skills. The Master in Contemporary History qualifies you for careers in cantonal, federal and international organizations, NGOs, the media, cultural organizations, the diplomatic corps and public administration. The Master in Contemporary History also qualifies you to teach in upper secondary schools (Teaching Diploma for Academic Upper Secondary Education) and for doctoral schools in History and Contemporary History.
