Study programme description

Master

English Language and Literature

Degree conferred
Master of Arts in Languages and Literatures: English

Languages of study
Study in English

Commencement of studies
Commencement of studies in the Autumn Semester (September) or in the Spring Semester (February)

Access to further studies
This Master programme qualifies students also for the Doctoral programme Language Sciences.

Over the four semesters, the study programme involves a broad-based approach in which most students work on all of the subdisciplines of English, with an option to study one field in depth – British or American literature, Medieval literature, or Linguistics. Interdisciplinary work is a key aspect of studies in the Department and there are intensive weekend seminars for some classes during which students and professors meet in a congenial setting to investigate a subject in detail. The study programme culminates with the writing of an original thesis in a field of the student's choice. Students can participate in research colloquia and explore their ideas in a setting of peers. The department has extensive and up-to-date physical and electronic library resources.

Profile of the study programme

What are we like?
Did you know that English is the largest language department in the multilingual world of the University of Fribourg? Our five professors were born in five different countries, hold doctoral degrees from Bern, Berlin, Oxford, and Virginia, and are deeply committed to their teaching and research. Three post-doc assistants support the teaching program while continuing to pursue their own research.

What do we do?
We offer a solid, comprehensive curriculum ranging across all major fields of Anglophone literature in England and the United States, English linguistics, and the historical forms of the English language from Beowulf, through Chaucer and Shakespeare to the English we speak and write today. Interdisciplinary work is key to our identity at Fribourg. Our professors publish their research in peer-reviewed journals and with internationally renowned presses such as Oxford University Press, Manchester University Press and the University Press of Virginia. They are involved in prestigious international research projects in Oxford, in the United States, and in Australia. In addition, they contribute regularly to national and international conferences as well as to events offered by the Institute of Comparative Literature, which was founded by a member of the English department.

What can you do here?
Our students come from Switzerland and abroad, and English is our exclusive language of communication in the hallways as well as in the classroom. Studying with us gives you the opportunity to learn about medieval women, act in plays, do linguistic field work in sociolinguistics, study English detective fiction, discover the rich intellectual world of the English and European Renaissance, and investigate the American Western or meet contemporary American poets. You will meet scholars of international acclaim who are regularly invited to give talks at our University. We have exchange partnerships with universities in Nebraska, Mississippi, and Arizona, in particular for first- and second-year BA students. Our students have won literary prizes and published their manuscripts. They have enjoyed intensive weeks of theatre-going in London, and performed in Renaissance plays and shot films in Oxford Colleges. Others have won travel awards to academic conferences from Albuquerque to Puerto Rico. Students in Linguistics may work together with the nationally recognized Research Centre on Multilingualism. Students in Literature are invited to cross-enroll in classes offered by the Institute of Comparative Literature.

How will you learn?
Our MA study plan is intended to combine a broad-based education in the subdisciplines of English with the opportunity to specialize. In every case, you will work closely with the professor, as the average enrollment in our MA seminars is 10-15. Over the course of four semesters, you will probably sample all of our areas, but you have the option of studying one field in depth – British or American literature, Medieval literature, or Linguistics – and to write an original thesis in your chosen field as well. This kind of focus positions you well for the next step in your education or your professional life outside of the University. It also gives you leverage for entrance into Ph.D. programs, both here and abroad. We have extensive and up-to-date library resources, both physical and electronic. You can participate in research colloquia and explore your ideas in a setting of peers. We ensure that our doctoral students participate in doctoral workshops.

In the recent past, we have successfully experimented with intensive weekend seminars for some of our classes. In these seminars, students and professors meet in a congenial setting to investigate a subject in detail.

Where will you go from here?
Whether you began your studies here with us or joined us with a Bachelor's degree from another university or a related field, you should use your two years at the Master's level to immerse yourself in the diversity of your field and to satisfy your intellectual curiosity. You will discover opportunities to publish some of your work or to attend graduate student conferences. Many of our recent graduates have secured employment in the Swiss school system. When you complete your Master's degree, you can choose from among French-speaking or German-speaking teacher education programs right here in Fribourg. Other graduates work internationally, in journalism or the world of publishing, or in non-profit organizations.

Admission

Master's degree programmes are built on the knowledge and abilities that were acquired when obtaining a Bachelor's degree.

Holders of a Bachelor's degree awarded from a Swiss university can be admitted to a Master's degree programme within the corresponding discipline (requires the acquisition of minimum 60 ECTS credits at Bachelor level in the corresponding discipline) without any additional requirements. The same applies to holders of a Bachelor's degree awarded by a foreign university, provided that the Bachelor's degree is recognised and considered equivalent by the University of Fribourg.

Holders of a Bachelor's degree awarded from a Swiss university or holders of a Bachelor's degree awarded by a foreign university, provided that the Bachelor's degree is recognised and considered equivalent by the University of Fribourg, can be admitted to a Master's degree programme within another discipline with prerequisites (must be successfully completed before starting the Master's degree programme) or additional requirements (can be completed during the Master's degree programme). According to existing agreements, holders of a Bachelor's degree awarded from a Swiss university of applied sciences can also be admitted with prerequisites or additional requirements.

The respective conditions of admission for each Master's degree programme are reserved.

Alternatives

Also offered as a minor study programme (30 ECTS credits).
