Profile of the study programme

The Master of Arts in interreligious Studies offers broad-based advanced training in religion, its role and its evolution throughout history and society. Special attention is focused on Christianity, interreligious and intercultural dialogues and self-reflection in other religions. The main programme is currently being offered in German or as part of a bilingual programme (German and French), in which case the resulting degree will carry the distinction «Bilingual curriculum».

The field described here by the intersection of ethics, spirituality and interreligious dialogue is the focus of this programme of study. This approach opens new avenues to understanding the increasing abundance of religious landscapes not only as a consequence of structural transformations but also as the result of a broadening field of spirituality.

The programme is thus conceived as a network connecting Faculties, while being integrated mainly within the Faculty of Theology. The course is deliberately interdisciplinary and open to students from any discipline as a minor programme. The Swiss Centre for Islam and Society (CSIS) accordingly plays an important role in the programme.

Career prospects
The programme offers career prospects for the following target groups, among others:
– Theologians seeking to specialise in political studies of religions so as to work within or outside the Church;
– Experts and interreligious/intercultural mediators needing to acquire new knowledge about religions and their impact on social life (managing communities, working in the media/culture, adult training, national or international trade, NGOs etc.);
– Teachers in state-run secondary schools may offer their pupils one module of this study course.
